HATS OFF IN CHURCH.

A Chicago Pastor Serves Notice on the Women of His Congregation.

The women of Unity church, Oak Park, will take off their bonnots and hats and sit unbonneted and unhatted during the Sunday morning and evening services conducted by their pastor, the Rev. R. F. Johannot, who says he "cannot see why the children of darkness should always be wiser than the children of light." In fact, he does not propose to let the theater become more advanced than the church. So a few weeks ago he intimated to his congregation his wishes in the matter and quested the women of Unity church to leaders in the new movement.

Naturally the step caused something more than a ripple of surprise. Not a little indignation was expressed. There were some who said Pastor Johonnot was growing autocratic when he attempted to dictate in matters of dress. It hardly seemed decorous to sit unbonneted in church; besides, there were other questions involved. What was to become of the church millinery? "How does my hair look?" would be the query now, instead of the old familiar "Is my hat on straight?"

It certainly gives the congregation a home look as they sit all with uncovered heads, but somehow it is not satisfying. The attractive and diverting spectacle of well trimmed hats and bonnets, resembling as they do a garden of flowers, is like the withdrawal of the stained glass windows or an effective part of the serv-True, there is no craning of the neck to get around a big, effensive hat to see the preacher, and this is the reason for the mandate, "Take off your bonnets and

A Surprised Man.

A man named Finney from New Mexico arrived in town the other day for the express purrose of shooting Colonel Joe Williams to satisfy an old grudge. He was passing up and down the street and making inquiries when he ran up against the colonel, and before he could get his gun out of its holster he had a bullet in his shoulder and a second through his hand, and was laid out. Mr. Finney says he shall start for home as soon as able and abandon his idea of killing the colonel. That is very kind and sweet of him, and on behalf of the community we return thanks. Our Paths Diverge.

We are sorry to announce the fact that Colonel Chilton, who was among the first dozen subscribers to The Kicker, has stop-ped his paper and is no longer our friend and well wisher. The colonel is a man who takes a newspaper for the sole pur-pose of keeping posted on the murder rec-ord in the United States. Neither politics, poetry, story nor local news is of the slightest interest to him. There has hardly been a week in all these years in which he has not complained of us. On occasions we have published as high as 50 murders, but the colonel suspected that we left out ten or a dozen. In order to satisfy him we have published the particulars of fictitious Mr. Jack Preston, the cowboy poet of murders, and he has caused us more anxi-Arizona, leaves for the east this week to ety than any hundred subscribers. He has satin robes in all the bright colors of the rainbow, and when he takes a walk in the vast grounds of his grand palace at Peking it is asserted that the populace knows of the circumstance by the reflection in the sky. His diamonds are sufficient in number and size to make even Otero turn green with envy, and for each rown—he never wears the same one twice in the same season—he has a special set of iewels to match.

But it is not his diamonds, nor yet his rubies, nor even his emeralds, that are his chief glory. Jade is of all precious stones the one which is most highly prized in China, and his collection of jade is the most expensive and valuable in the empire. He has one necklace of the rarest and most beautiful green jade, which is valued at over $50,000, and he never wears this except with a special costume which exactly matches it in color. He has never done any soldiering and does not possess the yellow jacket, but he wears the red button of the first rank, with a peacock's feather. However, to Chinese eyes these marks of dignity are nothing compared to the girdle of carved jade that encircles his capacious waist, the historic carved jade flower that gleams from the front of his cap and the wonderful jade ring which on occasions of ceremony he wears upon his thumb .- San Francisco Argo-
